Building Capacity for Current and Aspiring University Faculty

Strong university faculty is fundamental for effective higher education. Faculty members inspire students, design curricula, promote learning, lead research, and publish scientific results. In 2013, WWF's Russell E. Train Education for Nature Program (EFN) launched this fellowship opportunity with support from an anonymous donor with the goal of improving academic programs in conservation.

To date, EFN has funded more than 40 faculty members under this initiative. We are proud to continue to offer this opportunity to current and aspiring university faculty that are affiliated with or currently employed at African, Asian, and Latin American universities. This opportunity is for doctoral degree study in social science, natural science, and other conservation-related fields. After completing a degree, the individual must enhance, expand, or establish a graduate-level conservation program at a university in their home country. By doing so, WWF aims to improve the capacity of local and regional universities, encourage future conservationists to study in their home countries, and ensure higher education opportunities are more equitable and accessible in the Global South.

FELLOWSHIP OVERVIEW

To build local capacity in Asia, Africa, and Latin America, EFN is offering fellowships to current and aspiring faculty members to enable them to pursue their PhD. Applicants may apply for up to two years of funding and request up to $30,000 per year. The amount of funding will vary.

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

SELECTION PROCESS

Train Fellows are selected through a competitive, merit-based process. An independent, interdisciplinary panel of experts will be convened to review applications and to identify the top candidates based on the following criteria:

- ▶ Relevance of the proposal to the topic
- ▶ Professional qualifications
- ▶ Demonstrated leadership
- ▶ Academic achievement
- ▶ Commitment to conservation education in home country or region
- ▶ Potential impact of proposed research
- ▶ Evidence of enrollment or ongoing enrollment in an institute of higher learning
